Question 1.3.2—How have developing countries addressed resilience and sustainability?

- Developing countries face many challenges
  - They often have limited legacy systems—but it's a two-edged sword.
    - They must find the means to build up their system
    - This can sometimes mean they have a nearly clean sheet to build their systems.
- Are there examples of building isolated systems in remote areas that can later be interconnected?
- There have been interesting innovations regarding mobile phone networks in remote areas, are their lessons to be learned for electric power?
